New Items in the Library

To find out what new items the UNCG Library has available, start at the Library’s main page, library.uncg.edu, and click on the “library catalogue” link. Look for the tab that says “new items.” These items are arranged in a couple different categories according to where they are physically on campus. The Jackson Library items, which should be new items that came in this week, are arranged by LC call number - in other words, by subject. So if we click on “Education,” we can discover the new items in the Education subject area, what’s available or already checked out. Click on “select another list” to go back. On the right side, we see the Music Library, located in the School of Music, Theatre and Dance building, and the Teaching Resources Center in the School of Education building , both listing the last month’s new items. The last listing, Journal Finder, will show the newest electronic resources, such as ejournals. So go ahead and explore to find out what’s new in the University Libraries!
